

The onset of the Internet and globalisation has changed the way career management is approached. The research was based on both questionnaires and interviews with both employers and employees to assess their individual perceptions of the current use of technology, and the prospect of expanding this use to include the more interactive environments, such as those used by gaming and simulation. The results show that there were no perceived barriers which could not be overcome.